

Aptitudes In Action

Cool Examples of Finger Dexterity

In the 1920's, Johnson O'Connor, a General Electric engineer, wanted a new way to evaluate which jobs workers were best suited for.

Mr. O'Connor, a former John Dewey student, developed a Finger Dexterity test, which focused on workers needs rather than management.

Several people who illustrate high-level Finger Dexterity are noted in this post. If each person is ranked as 10 on a scale of 1-10, where might you be on the scale?

Job Switching

Episode: 036

Classic episode from the second season of the 1950's sitcom in which Lucy and Ethel get jobs in a candy factory.

Notice the silent efficient candy maker on the assembly line...

Note: Some people may be forced to admit that their

Finger Dexterity aptitudes match Lucy Ricardo's.
